

ChatGPT and an agent: what is actually different

From The Travel Advisor's AI Playbook (Empowerment AI). Free to use and share.

Everything you built this morning runs on a free ChatGPT or Claude account: three Projects, nine prompts, one scheduled nudge. That is the do-it-yourself version, and it is real work saved every week. An agent is the next size up. Here is the honest difference.

Free ChatGPT or Claude (what you built today)	An agent (what gets built for you)
Waits for you to open a tab	Comes to you: on a schedule, or when something happens
Knows this chat and your Project's instructions	Knows your business: your voice, your brand, your open quotes
Writes	Writes and does: checks a sheet, drafts into your mail, updates a record
You copy and paste	You approve, it sends, from your address
Lives in a browser	Lives where you already are: a text, an email

The line that matters: it drafts, you approve, nothing reaches a client without your eyes on it.

What the free version cannot do, stated plainly

- Read your inbox or your CRM.
- Notice on its own that a quote went quiet nine days ago.
- Send an email to a client.
- Run at an exact time (free scheduled tasks run in a morning, afternoon, or night window, once a day, three at most).

Everything else in the morning, it does.

The one rule still applies

An agent gets the trip, never the client's identity. The same stripping habit, the same safe half. A well-built agent refuses to store a passport number or a card if one is pasted.
